PHNOM PENH, Cambodia, March 21 (NYT).—Communist gunners fired at least 150 rockets into Phnom Penh last_night, killing on estimated 75 persons and wounding more than 160 in the higgest enemy attack of the war on the Cambodian capital. A Viet Cong sapper group of 30 men also attacked the Cambodian national radio station, damaging several of the transmitters and killing 25 guards. A Viet Cong body was found this morning at the radio station,

WASHINGTON, March 21 (IHT)—The introduction of a second memorandum from International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. lobbyist Mrs. Dita D. The first memorandum was published three weeks ago by columnist Jack Anderson, who also accused former Attorney General John N. Michell, tha man nominated to be his suc-cessor, Richard G. Kleindienst, and other high administration officials of involvement in the

The new memo, made public by the head of ITT's Washington office, William P. Merriam, is a general review of Mrs. Beard's lobbying activity and makes no meotion of the anti-trust case.

Barely Mentioned

The document, dated June 25. 1971-the same date as the Anderson memo-mentions the convention in only one paragraph and refers to the underwriting arrangements as a possibility rather than as a fact.

According to Mr. Merriam, this "flatly contradicts the allegations that prior to this date a deal had been made to bring the convention to San Dlego and to settle the anti-trust case in return for ITT's support of the convention." The new memorandum was

It was the first Communist attack on Phnom Penh since December. Cambodian military sources said enemy gunners fired their 122-ium rockets from three directions on the city directions on the city.

Little Resistance

The Viet Cong guerrillas who attacked the radio station on the outskirts of the city apparently met little resistance. Most of the Cambodian guards were reported to be without ammunition, and there were no signs of a battle at the station this morning. Two Cambodian tanks were destroyed at the radio station, which was built by Communist China during the regime of Prince No-redom Sihanouk.

The Communist terrorists also entered the house of the director of the radio station, Col. Som Sam Al, and killed him, his French wife and their son by slitting their throats. Col. Al was a close as-sociate of Col. Lon Nom, the younger brother of President Lon

The protest, such as it was, was seen by observers as stemming from several factors. In some cases candidates were unpopular locally. In others, voters apparently sought to indicate displea-sure over the relatively slow pace of reform. Some may have sought to show opposition to the Moments later, charges estimated by the army at 100 pounds each exploded in cars parked in Carlisle Road and Shipqual Street, at the city center.

The Shipquai Street blast wrecked four shops and damag-ed every building on the block, the spokesman said. It was powerful enough to hurl frag-ments of metal 90 feet in the air, centing the clock face in the tower of the Guildhall, Londonderry's city hall. The fourth explosion later in the afternoon blasted shops in Starand Road, about 300 yards from the site of the morning bombs. This bomb also was hidden in a hooby-trapped car. In each of the four cases the militant Provisional wing of the outlawed Irish Republican Army telephoned in advance, giving the police a chance to evacuate the areas.

Yesterday in Belfast it was not that woy. The blast was in a street full of shoppers evacuated from a nearby area after a bomb

The IRA's politically-oriented Official wing disclaimed responsibility for that explosion, But the Provisionals have remained silent, except to acknowledge the killing in Londonderry yesterday of a 19-year-old British soldier.

Gun Battle Reported A Provisional statement Monday evening termed the sniper shooting "retaliation for the murder" of civillans by troopers.

Also in Londonderry, British troops fought a two-hour gun-battle today with at least 20 gunmen across open land near a Roman Catholic housing development, an army spokesman said. No casualties were reported.

In London, the British government has completed its political peace package for Ulster, and if Mr. Faulkner approves it quickly, the government hopes to unvoil it before the end of the weck, government sources said.

If he insists on consulting his own government, publication may be delayed until next week, the sources added.

Tories Slice Tax By $3.1 Billion to Revive Economy

By Bernard D. Nossiter

LONDON, March 21 (WP).—Britain's Conservative government swallowed a big swig of Keynesian medicine today, announcing tax cuts of $3.1 hillion to revive the sluggish economy. The measures were disclosed by Anthony Barber, the chancellor of the exchequer, in the annual budget speech, a ritual that kept him on his feet for two hours and seven minutes.

The bulk of the tax cut, about $2.5 billion worth, will go to bottom bracket taxpayers. Direct tax relief for business, traditionally the Tory party's best friend, is

Mr. Barber said the aim of all this is "to help British industry to modernize" as the country faces stiffer competition from its Common Market colleagues. That is the language con-

This, said Mr. Barber, would take some 2,750,000 persons off the tax rolls entirely. The remaining 21,000,000 taxpayers would save, he said, about £1

Because the Tories hold a clear majority in the House of Com-mons, there is practically no change of Parliament upsetting the government's plans. Thus the tax relief will show up in pay checks as early as May 4. Spending Plans

Under the peculiar system lo vogue here, the "budget" speech makes no mention of government spending plans. They were announced separately, back in December, and also call for a hefty stimulus.

All this, the government hopes, will expand its yearly growth in output to a rate of 5 percent. This is an ambitious goal since growth has been running at just a shade over 1 percent for the past two years. The government apparently felt it had to go for broke, especially since unemployment has been rising steadly for 16 months and is now hoverlog near the one million level.

Thus, the regime of Prime Minister Edward Heath, in power since June. 1970, has faithfully followed the economic path of President Nixon First, it tried deflation, then some reflationary nibbles and today a huge reflationary boost. If the pattern holds, the next step here will be price and wage controls, emphemistically called "incomes policy" in Europe, to restrain the inflation touched off by the latest

ITT-CIA Link on Chile Asserted

WASHINGTON, March 21 (NYT) — Jack Anderson, the syndicated columnist, said today that the International Telephone and Telegraph Corp., working closely with the CIA, attempted to stop-the election of President Salvador Allende of Chile in 1970.

He said the effort was outlined in another series of secret documents he had obtained from ITT's files. Some ITT investments are now directed by the Chilean government.

[A spokesman for ITT describ-ed the column as without foun-dation in fact." The spokesman said "ITT has never intervened or interfered in the internal affairs of Chile in any way. Mr. Anderson reported that William R. Merriam, vice-president in charge of TTT's Washington nffice, wrote a memorandum to a company director, John A. McCone, a former head of the CIA, describing a meeting between Mr. Merriam and a CIA

Mr. Anderson said the memorandum stated that the source was "still very, very pessimistic about defeating Allende" but that "epproaches continue to be made to select members of the armed forces in an attempt to have them lead some sort of uprising -no success to dete."

Mr. Merriam complained in the document that "practically nn progress has been made in trying to get American business to cooperate in some way so as to bring on economic chaos."

U.S. Attorney in San Diego Denies Aiding Nixon Friend

SAN DIEGO, Calif, March 21 (AP).—U.S. attorney Harry D. Steward, denying allegations in Life magazine that he tried to block investigations in San Diego, sald yesterday that he still has the Justice Department's full confidence.

The magazine said Mr. Steward squelched an investigation of re-ports that illegal political contributions were being funneled through a company controlled hy financier C. Arnholt Smith, whom the magazine identified as a friend and financiel supporter of President Nixon. It also said Mr. Steward was appointed by Mr. Nixon on Mr. Smith's recommendation.

Hoping for major triumphs over Mr. McCarthy in the presidential preference contest and in the race against Sen. McGovern for delegate support at the Democratic National Convention in Miami Beach in July, Sen. Muskie refused to concede that a narrow victory in Illinois would nudge him out of contention.

"The only vote that counts is 51 percent of the delegates at the convention and I'll have them in July," he predicted.

But a victory today that was less than clear-cut would, most political observers agreed, seriously threaten his drive for the nomination after his unimpressive showing in New Hampshire and his fourth place in Florida.

Without a substantial victory from the two million or so voters in Illinois, Sen. Muskie would faced with an all but impossible task in staying among the Democratic frontrumners in the Wisconsin primary in two

Meanwhile an 11th-hour declsion by a federal court judge opened the way for an avalanche of election fraud complaints against Mayor Daley's regular Democratic organization in today's primary election.

The ruling was handed down by Judge Bernard M. Decker, a Republican appointee. He en-joined all election polling place judges in Chicago and five nearby suburban townships from follow-ing "official" instructions on ballot challenges.

The instructions had been distributed by the Daley-nominated Chicago Board of Election Com-

One instruction forbade challengers to compare voter appli-cation signatures with those in official registration binders, making it difficult for challengers to detect forgeries.

Another key instruction gave judges broad discretion in refusing to consider challenges if, in the judges opinion, a challenge was intended to "slow down the election or barass a voter."

In past elections, these instructions led to mass refusals to consider challenges by polling place "watchers" and "challengers" representing the interests of antimachine candidates or nonpartisan civic groups.

Judge Decker ruled that the instructions provided no criteria for judges to determine the dif-ference between valid and invalid challenges.

U.S. High Court To Review Stand On Confessions

to begin, near Phoenix, Ariz,

WASHINGTON. March (NYT). - The Supreme Court agreed yesterday to make its first review of the Warren court's controversial Miranda V. Arizona decision on confessious since President Nixon's four nominees joined the court.

The 1966 Mirando ruling held that suspects must be advised of their rights before interrogation or their confessions may not be used in court. The decision has often been cited by Mr. Nixon as one that should be overturned because it unduly favors the "criminal forces" in society.

Yesterday the court granted an appeal that the justices could use as a vehicle for a thorough reconsideration of the Miranda case, but the posture of the lower court decision makes it most likely that the case will be decided on a narrow interpretation of one aspect of the Miranda ruling. Only two justices who joined the 5-to-4 Miranda decision, William J. Brennan jr. and William O. Douglas, are still on the Supreme Court. Two dissenters, Potter Stewart and Byron R. White, remain on the court, and President Nixon has added Warren E. Burger, Harry A. Blackmun, Lewis F. Powell jr. and William H. Rehnquist-all of whom are considered law-andorder conservatives.

'30 Days Appears Ample'

interest."

WASHINGTON, March 21 (UPI).-The Supreme Court declared today that all lengthy state and local residence requirements for voting are unconstitutional and suggested that 30 days should be enough.

The ruling came in a six-to-one decision which struck down Tennessee's requirement of a year's residence to vote in state elections and three months at the county level. The lone dissenter was Chief Justice Warren E. In the majority opinion, Justice

Thurgood Marshall commented that a 30-day waiting period should be aufficient to prevent any voter fraud but called "a year or three months too much. The court was told that 24 states have a onc-year residence requirement, 23 a waiting period of 120 days or six months, and three, 90 days or three months.

1970 Congress Law

Congress, in enacting a 1970 voting rights law, set 30 days as the residence requirement for voting in presidential and vicepresidential contests.

It was estimated in briefs filed in the case that state requirements disqualify an estimated 8 percent of otherwise eligible

Justice Harry A. Blackmun, who concurred with the court's finding but did not join in Justice Marshall's opinion, said he suspected the court was leaving to the future a test of a waiting period of, say. 35 to 75 days in order to pipoint the situation more exactly.

Justices Lewis F. Powell jr. and William H. Rehnquist, who were not on the court when the case was argued, did not participate in the ruling, Justice Marshall's decision did not rule out residence requirements altogether.

He said: "Fixing a constitotionaly acceptable [waiting] perlod is surely a matter of degree." and added:

"It is sufficient to note here that 30 days appears to be an ample period of time for the state to complete whatever administrative tasks are necessary to prevent fraud-and a year, or three months, too much."

Justice Marshall noted that Congress set 30 days when in 1970 it abolished long-term residence remirements as a precondition to voting in presidential and vice-presidential elections, The court said it might be true that new residents as a group know less about state and local issues than older residents. "and it is surely true that duwill exclude some people from voting who are totally uninformed

The transactions detailed in the legal complaint involve the said of hundreds of sliver mining claims in Nevada to the Hughes Tool Company in 1968. It is alleged they were gathered up by a group of conspirators who then sold them to Hughes interests at inflated prices.

The formerly trusted employee named as defendant is John H. Meier, once Mr. Hughes's "scientific adviser." Mr. Meler was a witness in the early stages of the federal grand jury investiga-tion in New York of The Auto-biography of Howard Hughes," the book that turned out to be a hear.

· Meier Discharged

The existence of the mining claim controversy was hinted at in late 1970 in the court battle that came when Mr. Hughes dismissed Robert A. Maheu as manager of his Nevada properties. It was understood then that Mr. Maheu had the mining claim purchases investigated, and had persuaded Mr. Hughes to allow him to discharge Mr. Meier.

However, it was not until the suit was filed here that the dimensions of the transactions were known. Mr. Hughes bought over 2,000 mining claims in Nevada, Utah and California during 1968. Mr. Meier was Mr. Hughes's scientific adviser when the industrialist lived in the Desert Inn in Las Vegas and was engrossed in a campaign to force the Atomic Energy Commission to stop testing hydrogen bombs in the Nevada desert. According to the suit, at the same time he was advising Mr. Hoghes about nuclear falloot and earthquake threats, Mr. Meier was a part of a group that was acquiring marginal mining prop-

JERUSALEM, March 21 (NYT). -Israeli plans for municipal elections in the occupied West Bank next week appeared in danger of collapse today as pres-sure from Jordan and Palestinian guerrilla threats of assassination against candidates began taking

Anti-election agitation in the city of Nablus led to the abrupt withdrawal of eight leading can-didates, including the former mayor, Hamdi Canaan, who reportedly said he pulled out "in view of the ugly atmosphere in the city and future dangers."

Technically, the election in Nablus—largest of the 10 towns where polling is scheduled next Tuesday-has already been aborted since there are only 10 candidates remaining for the 10 places on the municipal council. In such a case, according to the Jordanian election law, the candidates automatically fill the equal number of posts and no election is required.

When the Israeli military administration called the elections last December, the municipalities were warned that if a sufficient number of candidates did not present themselves, an Israeli officer would be named to take over the local administration.

All three missiles have been displayed at military parades, but deployment of the weapons was indged pointless because of the guidance troubles that prevented accurate firing.

The Egyptians have been eager to deploy ground-to-ground missiles—at least for deterrent effect and morale benefits-since it was claimed here-more than a year ago that Israel was manufacturing Jericho missiles and stationing them for poten-tial use against Egypt.

Despite Egyptian pleas, the Soviet leaders declined to deliver provocative offensive weapons like missiles. The reported agreement to assist Egypt in overcoming the guidance difficulties. ficulties with the Egyptian-made missiles appears to be a com-promise solution.

Two of Egypt's missiles, the Zafir and the Kahir, were test-fired on July 21, 1962. The Raed was first fired in July, 1963.

According to published reports the Zafir (Victory) and the Kahir (Conquero?) are single-stage weapons designed to be fired from mobile platforms. The Raed (Pioneer) is a two-stage missile fired from fixed positions.

were once reported in voluma production, but none were known to have been fired against Israeli forces during the six-day war in June, 1967.

A boost was given to Egypt's missile experience by the Soviet delivery of complex SAM-3 antiaircraft missiles two years ago and the subsequent training of Egyptians in their use. There are reports in Cairo that several hundred Egyptians will be sent to the Soviet Union for advanced training in missile technology.

Police sources indicated that extensive searching of homes and offices of leftists bave produced evidence that Mr. Feltrinelli was involved in programs of planned violence by anarchists and

Police described the 10-room apartment in downtown Milan in which Mr. Corradini was picked up as a "rallying point for the guerrillas" of the March 11 riot. They said they found 14 camp beds in it and many "important" papers, notes and lists of

The apartment had been rented by Carlo Pioroni, a teacher who has been missing since police questioned him briefly five days ago. They bad summoned him because they found he had insured the van which stood locked and abandoned near Mr. Feltrinelli's body on the outskirts of Milan.

Mr. Floroni, an active member of Worker's Power until a few months ago when be reportedly joined the underground guerrilla group Red Brigades, had also previously been questioned in connection with the rioting.

Mr. Feltrinelli's mutilated body was found close to a dynamited power pylon. According to some reports, Mr. Feltrinelli, in collaboration with guerrilla groups he had been financing for years, had intended to sabotage Milan's power system. These reports say that the sabotage plan was part of a scheme to incite violence in Italy, including the Milan riots. Mr. Feltrinelli, a friend of Cuban Premier Fidel Castro and an admirer of Che Goevara, had a fortune estimated to be worth some $500 million in stocks and real estate.

As Dry Spell Lowers Level

By John M. Goshko BONN, March 21 (WP).—At a time when foreign-policy disputes have him fighting for his political life, Chancellor Willy Brandt is finding his fragile government coalition threatened from another in Athens Bay, as a "symbolic protest" against American ap-

The trouble stems from rising dissatisfaction with Mr. Brandt's. domestic programs. Many politicians here regard it as even more dangerous to his survival than the current struggle over ratification of his treaties with the Soviet Union and Poland, Some even think Mr. Brandt would be wise to use the treaty controversy as an excuse to resign and seek new national elections this summer. This, they argue, would at least allow him to fight a campaign that would be largely a referendum on his Ostpolitik public opinion in his favor.

The big reforms promised by Mr. Brandt in education, taxation, social welfare and equalization of opportunity have yet to materialize. At the same time. there is a growing feeling within the electorate that the governpeen unable to main tain West Germany's economic stability and is letting the country drift toward an unacceptable rate of inflation.

Some political zources think that the storm building around Mr. Schiller is due less to discontent over his policies than to some well publicized side issues. In the last two weeks, he has been embroiled in both personnel difficulties within his ministry and an alleged nepotism scandal involving his brother-in-law.

There is some truth to this a lot of people who voted Social Democratic in 1969 because of faith in Mr. Schiller's ability to control the economy are starting to feel disappointed. And this disenchantment is spreading to other areas of domestic concern where the government's achieve-

Although he antered office intending to give domestic programs priority, the unexpected breakthrough of his reconciliation policy toward Eastern Europe mmediately forced his government to concentrate a disproportionate amount of time and talent on foreign affairs.

Also the government coelition has always been handicapped by having only a thin parliamentary majority-presently four votes. Moreover, since the allied Free Democratic ranks contain many says Mr. Cappel. The river at Duisburg is now flowing at 650 cubic meters per second. The norm for this time of year is 1,500. This has reduced the water depth at Duisburg to 5.8 feet. It should be more than 16 feet at this season. The Rhine runs through the densest population area in Central Europe, and 20 million West Germans get their drinking water from the river. Water purification plants in many areas are under heavy strain because the reduced quantities of even dirtier water take more time and effort to purify. Soma cities have begun preparing emergency measures, me-teorologist Schnorrenberger said, but he stressed there was no danger to health at this time. The river's fish population, largely killed off two years ago in a ireak situation in which a climatic inversion coincided with abnormally low water, is thriving.

able to make a higger push or reform in his second term. This approach also presupposes that the economy will be in good shape by 1973, since that would be the single biggest campaign issue after the foreign-policy battle p over. Here the government must

14th Theater Festival in a Foreign Key

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss DUBLIN, March 21 (IET). Foreign playwrights first seems to be the hospitable policy of the 14th Dublin Drama Festival, now in progress (to March

The first week's offerings included: a play about the trial of Roger Casement by two American dramatists, a play about Thoreau by two other American dramatists; a play about Joan of Arc by yet another American; the European premiere of John Guare's "House of Blue Leaves," awarded the New York critics' prize last year; a French com-pany in 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme"; an evening of Austral-ian poems, ballads and yarns; a oue-man show by the celebrated German mime, Helfrid Foron; and a formal reading of a new play on a biblical subject by Wolf Mankowitz of London, Next week: "Hamlet."

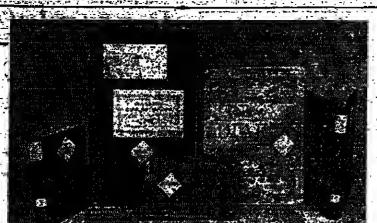

Ireland, however, was not entirely neglected during the first six days. Jack MacGowran recited selections from Samuel Beckett in a program directed by the anthor, "Beginning to End." A play by Desmond Porrestal, a leading figure on Irish television, "The True Story of the Horrid Popish Plot" had its premiere at the Gate Theatre. The Forrestal drama retells the Titus Oates affair which dominated English and Irish politics during Charles II's reign. Oates claimed to have discovered a conspiracy by Catholics in both lands to murder the king and take over the two kingdoms with the aid of the French army. He was supported by the perjuries of the king's chief opponents. A series of trials resulted in the execution of many innocent victims.

Casement Plan

"Prisoner of the Crown," at the Abbey, reviews the trial for high treason of Roger Casement, A former British diplomat, knighted for his services to the crown, the Irish-born Casement, filled with patriotic yearnings, resigned from the consular ser-vice in 1913 and turned revolutionary. In 1916, he visited German prison camps to recruit Irish soldiers in the British forces for a rebellion. When he learned of the proposed Easter. week rising (1916) he returned to Ireland aboard a German-submarine, accompanied by a vessel with arms and ammunition. Casement landed but was captured on April 24 and taken to London for trial.

During his trial, the prosecution sought to blacken him in the eyes of sympathizers by circulating reputed excerpts from a homogenual. These were prob-ably forgeries—after 56 years, the originals have yet to be released for public serviany. Casement was condemned to the callows, stripped of his knighthood and, after the failure of an appeal hanged at Pentonville, London on Aug. 3, 1916. Richard Stockton, basing his script on a story idea by Richard T. Herd, presents the case within the frame of the trial, employing flashbacks and asides to carry us from the jury room to the political intrigues behind the affair. John Kavanagh, who bears a striking resemblance to photographs of Casement, linpersonates the martyred rebel and also plays one of the jurors wbo, under pressure, votes for execution. This is a bit confusing as are several other mechan-in Yeats's phrase is still beating on the door. The content of the play is sufficiently gripping to make an American production possible. An imporant Broadway representative is in Dublin to see the play and is said to have delivered a favorable report.

"The Night That Thorean Spent in Jail" (at the Olympia) is by Jerome Lawrence and Robert E Lee, who wrote "Auntie Mame," "Inherit the Wind" and, this season. "The Incomparable Max." a biographical comedy about Max Beerbohm, the Edwardian wit dandy and critic. Their latest collaboration is not in the customary Lawrence-Lee manner. The Thorean play is designed in a loose, breakaway, hop-skip-jump style very similar to that of "Prisoner of the Crown." In both plays, the captives slip through the bars to enact incidents from their pre-prison existences. The Lawrence-Lee work has already had 141 productions in the United States, but it has not yet been seen in. New York, A plea for nonviolent dissent, it identifies the. 19th-century New England hermit with today's youthful opponents of conformity. bought the motion picture

Thoreau's discussions with the straight-faced Emerson on the slavery question, the Mexican War and the increasing squeeze that politicians are exercising on deluded citizens are voiced, with lively overtones. The affinity of contemporary youth with the philosopher of Walden Pond is heavily stressed. With its manufactured naivete, the writing is on the little theater movement level. Instead of full-blooded characters, Lawrence and Lee have drawn representative types. Instead of plausible dialogue, they give us plain talk. Yet, despite this coyly primitive approach, the piece has an understandable appeal and seems to have achieved its projected purpose. An all-Irish company negotiates the Yankee drawl without descending to caricature and performa the play as it was written without frills.

Joan of Arc

Whitehead Prize as the best play submitted to the Dublin Festival A reading of the manuscript discloses its literary qualities and theatrical possibilities.

The presentation at the Galety Theatre, however, was marred hy disputes between the anthor and the director and a subsequent editing of the text, a measure that inevitably weakens rather than strengthens the sought-for playing pace. The Dublin critics found it miscast, complained about the medley of accents and rigorously damned all.

Yet this dramatization of Joan's conflict with her peasant father, inspired by the pages of Michelet, is not to be dismissed. The role of the maid, of ber pigfarmer father, of her sympathizing uncle, of the man who would marry her, of the priest who would exorcize her are interestingly conceived and delineated. The play is certain to be seen again and again—under, one hopes, happier circumstances.

The End of the Egg Irving Marder:

The Donish Egg Export Cooperative has announced that, ofter jour years of experimentation, it has perfected a machine that will produce 240 eggs an hour-cylindrical in shape, each 16 inches long and 3 inches in diameter.

PARIS (IHT) -A hen with an inferiority complex is, heaven knows, a pitiable object, but it is one that we must evidently steel ourselves to cootemplate. Unless the Danish Egg Export Cooperative is pulling somebody's leg, this would appear to be the end of the egg as we have known it.

The news from Copenhagen will make especially polgnant reading over British breakfast tables. The British Empire, though only a shell of it remains, was built on eggs. The empire-builders—Gordon, Napier, Dalhousie, Rhodes—were egg-eaters to a man, as was the bard who sang their praises.

Through the centuries, the egg has held a central place on British tables. One of the more stirring bits on British TV is a short commercial on behair of the Egg Marketing Board, built around the slogan, "Go to Work on an Egg!" It shows 2 typical Briton, having breakfasted in the timehonored fashion, bounding away to the office like

Not that the egg has failed to leave its mark on-American history, with its British heritage, The wilderness was cleared by egg-eating settlers, and the West was won by men of the same stamp. The cutcome was predestined. Has anyone ever heard of an Indian brave who ate eggs?

A Tribute

It seems only fair, at this turning point, to pause for a moment in tribute to this remarkable object that has played a role in building empires and clearing wildernesses. Larousse Gastronomique, in fact, pauses for about a half hour, devoting almost 25 full pages to the egg and its many-splendored

"It has been proved that in general, no matter in what form eggs are taken," says Larousse, "they produce a quicker feeling of satisfaction than the equivalent amount of meat."

It continues with a statement that no one. I think, would want to argue with: "Ostrich, turkey. goose peacock and duck eggs are bigger than / hens' eggs; pigeon, guinea-fowl, pheasant, partridge, lapwing, plover and gulls eggs are smaller. All these are of a very similar composition except for duck and goose eggs, which are more oily." Larousse offers a list of more than 300 ways of preparing eggs (not counting the endless variations on the omelette). Among those that caught my eye was eggs Chateaubriand—soft-boiled and served with artichoke hearts topped with Béarnaise sauce. Larousse adds a cautionary note: "In cooking and baking only absolutely fresh eggs should be used. Certain methods of cooking eggs . . . Should only be used when the eggs are not more than a day or two old. Ideally only eggs laid on the day itself should be used but that is often difficult to

Sandwiches

To return, however, to Copenhagen and the Danish Egg Export Cooperative. One hesitates to speak of a breakthrough in this context, but that would seem to be the right term: For many years researchers and inventors have been trying to improve upon what is often regarded as one of nature's best packaging efforts. The Danes are aiming their long eggs at such wholesale customers as caterers, who often have to produce hundreds of egg sandwiches at short notice, and also at housewives. (The implication is that you could lop off a few slices at a time and store the rest in the refrigerator.) The Danes, at this stage, are keeping close-mouthed about the manufacturing method. Presumably the eggs are hard-boiled and then processed. Each long egg requires the concentrated effort of six nens.

Thus the juggernaut of progress hurtles ahead. In general one tends to agree with Larousse's edict that "in cooking and baking only absolutely fresh eggs should be used."

But certain other uses for the Danish product come to mind especially at this season. Easteregg rolling, for example: A cylindrical egg certainly ought to roll better than an egg-shaped egg; but its use would probably necessitate a change in the

Then there is the political aspect. If you were a candidate, would you prefer to be hit by a rotten hen's egg (weighing, according to Larousse, an average of two ounces) or by a 16-inch Danish egg? The latter, obviously much heavier, would smell a lot better and simplify the cleaning process. On the other hand, if one of these were dropped on your head from a great height . . .

'Far East Pagoda' Amplifies the True Guitar Sound

By Jan Sjöby STOCKHOLM (IET)—The classical guitar has received another lease on life in the age of the microphone, assorted electronic wizardry and immense concert halls.

Georg Bolin, a Stockholm cabinetmaker turned instrument maker, has found a way of making the frail tones and overtones of the guitar audible in the back rows of big auditoriums and stadiums without impairing the subtle nuances of the delicate instrument. He calls the device, literally translated, a spreader."

"It is not a regular electronic amplifier," says Mr. Bolin. "I like to think of it as, say, a satellite instrument."

"It is a satellite instrument," comments Per-Olof Johnson, associate professor of the classical guitar at the Royal Conservatory in Copenhagen. "I remember when Georg started toying with the idea; he built a regular guitar body and connected it by mysterious electronic means to the playing guitar. The thing seemed to work and Georg went on experimenting.

"By now it looks like a Far East pagoda," Prof. Johnson continues, and it really amplifies the true sound of the classical guitar. There is a button to it and it is very important to tune the tone spreader just right to suit the size and the acoustics of the room. The secret, I believe (and Georg is a bit secretive about it). is the materials used, alderwood and jacaranda, and the shapes of the resonance surfaces.

Georg Bolin, whose tone spreader is reaping praise from guitarists.

the professor adds. "He is a master craftsman with a real feeling for wood and form. Combine that with an extraordinary sense for accustic nuances and have a master guitar builder.'

"The medieval troubadors had no problems with the guitar and the lute," Mr. Bolin explains. "They played in small rooms, before small gatherings. Today is a problem: Gultarists perform in large spaces or with orchestral groups. The tender guitar simply doesn't have a chance beyond, say, 30 feet."

Remedies have been thought up before-microphone and loudspeaker, the electronic guitar all kinds of electronic devices. The problem is that the delicate instrument gets lost in "The major problem seems to have been that the regular loudspeaker is hullt in synthetic materials," says Prof. Johnson. "A sheet of cardboard, or whatever they use, cannot turn out the same resonance as real wood. And there are differences, too, beber once when Georg came along with two chunks of wood. One was 200 years old, the other fresb out of the forest. He tapped on them and the young wood said and the old wood said 'hoing.' 'See?' said Georg."

director of the apprentice school operated by Prof. Carl Malmsten, one of the leaders in Scandinavian modern furniture design. On the slde, for fun, Mr. Bolin started making guitars. His customers were mainly conservatory students who usually couldn't afford the price a bandmade guitar would normally command. Mr. Bolin made no major money on his hobby.

One guitarist could pay the regular price, though-a Spaniard named Andrés Segovia-and he

Mr. Bolin, still on a hobby basis, went on to build a concert piano. He took it to New York, where it managed to elicit enthusiasm from Leonard Bernstein. Eric Salzman, critic and composer, called Mr. Bolin the Gutenberg of the piano huilding

"It was a regular piano," com-ments Prof. Johnson. "The thing was that the combination of Georg's hands and his ears made it a very fine plano."

Mass Andiences Meanwhile, back in Sweden, Mr. Bolin sat back to do some serious thinking about the prohlem of making the volce of the classical guitar heard among a mass audience, without wrecking the natural sound. He knew full well that the problem was con-

"Georg phoned me last summer to tell me be had found the solution," recalls Prof. Johnson, "I didn't believe him—it was like an alchemist telling me be bad rich by now." Mr. Bolin, 59, spent the years

1950-67 as rector and artistic found a way of making gold. Well, I tested his tone spreader and it worked. For the first time, one can actually hear the guitar in an orchestral group, tha character of the sound isn't bastardized and the guitarist doesn't have to press his instrument beyond capacity."

"This is a fantastic thing." says Rune Gustafsson, one of Sweden's leading guitarists. "I remembar once when I was to pley a piece by Pierre Boulez with the Radlo Sweden Symphony Orchestra. The situation was perfectly absurd; my guitar hadn't a chance to be beard. At that time I could certainly bave uzed Georg's tone spreader.

Mr. Bolin still builds guitars and be figures he spends hetween 90 and 120 hours on each instru-ment. The materials for each guitar run around 600 Swedish rowns and they sell for some 3,000 crowns-around $625-each. At present, Mr. Bolin is working with sound-spreading devices for the violin and the bass. "The important thing is to amplify the sound of an instru-ment without losing the character of the tones and overtones." he says. "A source of inspiration right now is all those guitar players who have called to tell me about the adventure of filling a giant concert ball with one little guitar."

"The secret is," says Prof.
Johnson, "Georg's immense feeling for his materials-woodsand his incredible acoustic sensitivity. If he bad any trace of a businessmen in him he'd be trade union leaders in Moscow had some of the aspects of a fireside chat with the Soviet citizenry at large, some coloration of a report to an important hranch of the Soviet government. But it also had the effect of laying down some of the ground rules for the May visit of President Nixon to Moscow.

"We approach the forthcoming Soviat-American talks." Mr. Brezhnev sald, "from business-like, realistic positions" The Kremlin's intent, he went on, was "to find such areas in relations between Russia and the United States that would make it possible. without retreating from the principles of our policy, to establish a certain degree of mutually advantageous cooperation in the interests of the peoples of both countries and the strengthening of universal peace."

This is a mcdest, but practicable goal, and it is one to which the United States could well subscribe. But it is also extremely vague and teotative. It calls for exploration of possible areas of agreement-and in other portions of his speech. Mr. Brezhnev eeemed to rule out some very important portions of the world scene.

It would, of course, be possible for the Soviet Union and the United States to collaborate in sceking answers to the problems of Europe, now that Moscow has conceded Washington's legitimate interest in that continent (as well as the existence and significance of the Common Market). It would hosts that they are not the targets of the Leonid Brezhnev's televised address to the recent Sino-American rapprochement, and possibly to seek some three-way cooperation among the three powers concerned.

> These would be very dastrable subjects for top-level discossion. But rather more urgent is the situation in the Middle East, and here Mr. Brezhnev seems to have gone some distance to assure the Arabs of his deep and ahiding friendship. Since Arah aspirations are so sweeping and militant and since only some compromise can break the deadlock, this casts doubt on whether the United States can make much progress on the Issue in Moscow. Somehow, the arms race must be slowed there, just as the Soviet Union and the United States are in general agreement that their own competition in weapons must be subjected to some checks. It would not be wise for either the Soviets the Americans to bargain over the heads of Israel and the Arab states as to any settlement in the region. But surely they could agree on the rate at which, and the purposes for which, they should ship arms to the contending nations.

The Moscow talks will clearly have certain limitations—fewer, perhaps, than was the case in the Peking visit, since a good deal of exploration of Soviet-American differences has already taken place and a fair number of agreements bave already been reached. But the remaining sore points in the Mediterranean, the Indian Ocean, Middle Europe and the Middle East have already deeply involved Soviet and American interests. They also he useful for Mr. Nixon to assure his need treatment, and soon, before they bring up the temperatures of all parties concerned.

President Nixon's business in Moscow and Peking lies very much in the traditional line of politics and national security. In centrast, his trip to Canada next month will take him into the new diplomacy of cconomic and envircemental protection.

The Canadians are crucial to Mr. Nixon's attempts to improve this country's balance of payments since, after all, more than onefourth of our total foreign trade is with Canada. The Canadians plaintively deny that they are responsible for our international delicits, and observe that it is hard for a small country to live next to a neighbor as large as us. We reply by denying that we are trying to export unemployment to Canada, and we usually add that the Canadians are a higger country than they seem to realize. Since both countries are suffering high unemployment, and since both governments are moving toward national elections this year, neither feels that it has much room for maneuver.

About half of Canadian manufacturing industry is now owned by Americans. Severe restrictions on capital would, in fact, accommodate narrow but strong interests in both countries. They would please the Cacadian nationalists, and simultaneously help our balance of payments. Fortunately, both countries remain fairly solldly committed to the principle of free movement of

Prime Minister Trudeau and his cabinet have been considering for the past year a proposal for new controls on foreign ownership. But he has yet to proceed with legislation. With elections near and the country coming through a recession, . Mr. Trudeau does not care to frighten the husinessmen who preside over industrial expansion. This issue is chiefly interesting to the United States as an illustration of the internal Caoadian dilemma over foreign investment, which threatens sovereignty but promises jobs. Mr. Nixon is taking the position, quite correctly, that it is entirely up to the Canadians to set the limits on American ownership in their economy.

In the crucial matter of natural resources, where Canada is rich and we are hungry, government regulation is likely to prove more important over the years than ownership, Examples are already hecoming visible. The American-owned oll industry in Canada has been pressing the Canadian government to usa lis diplomatic channels to obtain larger U.S. import quotas. Conversely the United States would like to import more Canadian natural gas, but here the Canadians have been setting very careful quotas to protect their reserves. These matters may not appear very prominently in the communiques that follow Mr. Nixon's visit, but they are increasingly the substance of our

In the case of the most essential resource of all, water, the negotiators for the two countries are now working to complete the Great Lakes pollution control agreement, These talks have proved difficult and slow, but the announcement of Mr. Nixon's trip now creates considerable pressure to conclude them by the beginning of next month, If it produces a finished treaty to give the Great Lakes a belated measure of protection, the presidential visit to Ottawa will requira no other justification.

Moscow in a Hurry

Discreet pressures from Moscow on France to have the apparently bogged-down procedure concerning the European security conference stepped up are to be expected in the coming weeks. The Russlans know that within the Western camp the French are those most interested in the security conference and count on the virtues of imagination of French dlplomacy for breaking the deadlock. Paris, already designated as the place for the official contacts between Washington and Peking and seat of the conference on Vietnam, is indeed becoming one of the poles of Western diplomacy. It has often been said, and it remains true, that the main reason why Moscow is so eager to have the security conference is the desire to secure its Western areas better to respond to the Chinese challenge.

Heath, Pompidou Meeting

Two preoccupations appear: a Franch preoccupation not to revive the quarrel over supranationality; a British preoccupation not to make an anti-American Europe President Pompidou had suggested in his press conference the creation of a council of secretaries for European affairs. Mr. Heath is not very "warm" on this and Mr. Pompidou admits that it is not urgent. But they agree on the creation of a permanent political secretariat, also suggested by Mr. Pompidou, Mr. Heath wishes to have its headquarters in Brussels, Mr. Pompidoo on the contrary proposed Paris, so that the new body cannot be confused with the technical bodies in Brussels. The French appear very satisfied with the position adopted by Mr. Heath concerning the reform of the international monetary system. The main question is to protect Europe from the effects of American inflation, Mr. Heath reportedly agreed to a settlement fully conformant to French views. This settlement should: (1) Be founded on a return to dollar convertibility; (2) Not minimize the role of gold.

NEW YORK,—One outstanding cooclusion after a long Asian trip is that the postwar strategic balance is dissolving. Since there never was a truly stable balance, this means that a state of flux has set in. In no other area has this oew power relationship become more obvious.

The old empires are gone except for odd vestiges like Hong Kong and Macao and a coalescing West Europe has yet to produce a comprehensible policy in the East. Both CENTO and SEATO, the main multilateral alliances, are dead, even if they twitch posthumously. Russia now presses to move into areas they embraced.

This has encouraged an effort by America and China to reexamine tha region and find where they have common interests. It has also spurred fresh nationalism in Japan, of an economic, not a military sort.

Future Stability

Any future Asian stability depends on relationships between China, India and Japan that can be tolerated by Moscow and Washington. Peking will probably reconcile itself to the changed Indian situation and, without shandoning Pakistani friendship, return to the type of understanding with New Delhi that existed when Nehru was prime minister. This will ultimately help India to disengage from over-reliance on Russia.

As China and the United States recognize certain mutual interests that transcend ideology. they will find it useful to work together in counterbalancing Soviet interest in India Mrs. Gandhi might quite willingly play along, to frustrate Moscow's efforts to gain any preponderant influence in Southeast Asia.

Peking is better served by peace than war in Vietnam. It can better affor, to see the Indopeninsula neutralized rather than risk Soviet political gains there. Consequently the Chinese are less likely now to encourage Hand'a precondition to peace: replacing Thieu's presidential regime in Saigon with Koreans have sent experts to Bonn to study these.

The flaming issue between China and the United States, Taiwao, has been considerably accept rather than on what they defused. If some form of autonomy were to be offered when Chiang Kal-shek dies, most Talwanese might accept this. The big change since Nixon's is that no future Talwan formula can be unilater-Japan is vital to the New Look in Asia. Nixon's Feking visit, along more nationalistic lines. At the 1964 Japanese Olympic Games, the nation regained its self-confidence, at Expo 70 it became intexicated with its progress, and the 1972 Nixon shocks on the dollar and China have completed the regeneration. It is likely that Japan, during this decade, will demand extrusion of all United States bases while remaining under the American nuclear umbrella.

Washington, Peking and Moscow must arrange a vague ac-commodation that each will help its respective Asian clients only if each other's forces or proxy forces invade the territory of those clients. Were there such an invasion, it should be known the interested major power(s) would help; otherwise not. Thus each would look after its interests while avoiding purely local interests of the Communication powers are too radically different from those of the United States and of each other, to make such a triangular structure reliable Still, some understandings among them are an essential pre requisite to building a structure of peace by other means. The Third Tier

The third tier of such a structure must be one which brings in the rest of the world the more than half of mankind the more than three-quarters of the sovereign nations, which are neither Communist nor developed democracies.

The only structure which not meets that prescription, which since last year is almost universal and should soon become completely so, is the United Nations. Here is the structure within which conflicts among developing comtries (Arab-Israel, India-Pakistan) and conflicts between great powers inside the third world (Middle East, Southeast Asia, Indian Ocean) can most safely be defused and resoived.

Here is the instrument through which necessary ald to developing countries can be extended with least intrusion and least involvement of great powers. The United Nations is the tier of the structure of peace which the Nixon administration least understands and most oeglects-except when its purpose is served by blaming the UN for its mistakes.

It is doubtful that the subject was even mentioner in Peking It is unlikely that there is any intention to raise it in Moscow. Yet to speak of a "structure of peace" in the last third of the 20th century with only a heterogeneous assortment of rival great powers in mind, without thought of the world society of which the United Nations is the emerging prototype, would be to miss the forest for the trees.

A stable structure of peace will have to be big enough for everyone, even though . arge states will play the larges' part in it. There is a far better chance that great-power embitions can be contained and centrolled inside legally constituted international institutions than by precarious baiances combinations and accommodations among themselves.

What the Taiwanese Really Feel

By Edwin O. Reischauer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—Some commentators saw the statements about Taiwan in the Shanghai communique of Feb. 27 as the only concrete results emerging from President Nixon's talks with Chon En-lai. They said that the United States had made great concessions on Taiwan, without compensatory concessions from China, and that the settlement of the Taiwan issue was now clear because the door had been closed to a separate Taiwan. Neither of these conclusions is correct; in fact in both cases the exact reverse may be more accurate.

It has been clear for some time that the United States has no vital national interest in the existence of a separate Taiwan or the permanent maintenance of a military presence there. American forces in Taiwan are small and are largely for the purpose of maintaining a military supply line to Vietnam-a mission that one would hope and expect, will be entirely outdated soon. United States therefore has made no great concession in reaffirming "its interest in a peaceful settlement of the Taiwan question by the Chinese thems or in affirming its "ultimate objective of the withdrawal of all U.S. forces and military installations from Taiwan,"

Omission Noted

China for its part restated in the communiqué its whole position on Taiwan, but with one significant omission. There was no reference to the American treaty commitment to Taiwan. When the United States subsequently issued reassurances that the treaty was still in effect. Peking made no counter blast, In effect, it publicly accepted the status quo at least for the time being. After decades of arguing that it had nothing to discuss with the United States until we returned the "stolen" province of Taiwan, the Chinese discussed matters for many hours with the arch villain and then issued a communiqué in which they agreed to disagree and then try to move on beyond these disagreements to. the "normalization" of relations.

side stated that, pending "the ultimate objective" of complete military withdrawal, it would "in the meantime . progressively reduce its forces and military installations on Taiwan as the tension in this area diminishes." This sounds to me like a much slower withdrawal than I had previously expected.

Perhaps Peking was willing to make these very substantial concessions in its immediate stand on the Taiwan question because it believed that the basic problem was the American support for a separate Taiwan If so, this is a serious misunderstanding of what the problem really is. The Taiwan problem historically had its origin in a half century of Japanese colonial rule and then the American decision in 1950 to isolate Taiwan militarily from involvement in the Korean War, but it exists now and will contimue to exist in the future primarily because of the attitudes of the Taiwanese people them-

Status Quo Goes On

No one can speak with certainty about what is in the minds of . the Taiwanese. The politically repressive Nationalist regime has not permitted them to speak their minds But, as best one can judge, the vast majority of them appear to yearn for a separate The New York Times.

The communique even implied a rather long period of status quo for Taiwan. The American The Shanghai communique has The Shanghai communique has not changed any of this. In fact, it seems to guarantee the continuation of the status quo for some time, thus further strengthening the separateness of the Taiwanese from China. It may also force the Taiwanese majority and the mainland minority into a closer union. Americans should not assum that the Taiwan problem is solved or on the way to solution. "Autonomy" might serve for a while as a useful fig leaf term to conceal the realities, but it is not a solution. Peking and the Taiwanese could never agree on a common interpretation autonomy. It is distressing to see the United States acknowledging in the communique that "all Chinese on either side of the Taiwan Strait maintain there is but one China and that Taiwan is a part of China." This simply is not true. It is the view of the two governments involved but not of the bulk of the people on Taiwan. Let us hope that the President's agreement to this statement was merely a matter of ignorance—shocking though that is rather than heartless unconcern for what people really feel

Soviets Beat Design Snags On Computer

By Theodore Shabad MOSCOW, March 21 (NYT) .--The Soviet Union, after much delay, has begun production of a new series of advenced computers on which Russian economic planners have been counting to solve their country's critical shortage of computing power. News that the new machine, known as the ES-1020, was now being manufactured after having encountered serious design and production problems was contained in an obscure item in the Byclorussian newspaper Sovietaya Brelorussiye.

The newspaper announced that the new computer went into production recently et the Ordzhonikidze computer plant ln Minsk, tha capital of Byelorussia and e leading electronics center.

The ES-1020 is the first model of a series of third-generation computers being developed jointly by the Soviet Union and its East European allies. This particular model was designed by Byelorussian and Bulgarian specialists, the Minsk report said.

Seven-Year Lag The Soviet Union has been lagging et least seven years behind the United States in the development of third-generation computers, which rely on miniature circuitry incorporated into tiny crystals. The first generation used vacuum tubes and the second used transistors. The current five-year plan of the Soviet Union has set a production goal of 12,000 to 15,000 third-generation units to be in-troduced by 1975. Production was scheduled to begin this year, but reports of development delays had suggested that the timetable could not be maintained. The new computer appears to be part of a proposed series of machines that has become known abroed as the Ryad series. The Russian word "Tyad" means

—U.S. mutual funds have lost much of their glamour, and it may be years, if ever, before the industry regains its once-sizzling sales pace. In addition, there could be a major shift in the way the fund shares are marketed to the public. Those are the views of some security analysts who follow funds and of some top executives in the industry

Funds may be headed for a long period of slow, steady growth, says William Boscow. senior vice-president for marketing at Investors Diversified Services, the nation's biggest mutual fund complex. "But the phenom-enal success story of mutual funds," be adds, "is behind us."

In Fehruary, the industry had gross redemptions of $513.9 million, the highest ever, and net redemptions of $110 million, the third highest on record, the Investment Company Institute (ICI) reported yesterday. Maurice Jacques and Robert L.

Sales Decline Gross sales of funds fell to $404 million from $521.3 million

The eagerness of investors to take their money out of the funds is largely to blame for the decline. They redeemed $4.8 billion in fund shares last year, up from $3 billion the year before. Poor Performance A survey commissioned by tho thet two-th those investors redeeming their

It served well in the 1980s, but now has been weekened in several ways. Many salesmen have been forced out of business and sales of mutual funds through stock brokers have run into trouble with the 1968 ban on "give-ups." LAND IS NOT NEARLY SO EXCITING AS THE STOCK MARKET

You'll Miss Those Big Surprises Every Morning!

You know, the sleepless nights followed by that thrilling trip to your slockbroker's to see how much you've lost. The riding-a-roller-coaster feeling. You'll miss all that when you invest in scientifically selected and managed pre-builder California land.

As all our case histories can show you, your land simply appreciates for a solid profit in just a few years, Reinvest that, and you're pyramiding your profits like a pharaoh. Admittedly, it's not so sporting a proposition as the stock markel, but we're assuming you're an investor rather than a sportsman.

Unlike the stock market, pre-builder land does not suffer from ups and downs. (At least not from downs!) As in the slock market, you can buy on margin for tremendous leverage. And this land is unmatched as a tax sheller and hedge against inilation.

Send for the illustrated brochure explaining how we locate, negotiate for, and manage raw land for you before its demand by developers.

You may just have to find something else for excilement.

South chose to pass on the first round of this deal, but then leaped to three no-trump when his partner opened a thin hand with one diamond in fourth seat. The resulting three no-trump contract was distinctly optimistic, but the cards lay favorebly for the declarer.

After an opening spade lead to the ace and spade return, South prospects were very poor. as East had returned the three. there seemed a good chance of a 4-4 division, and some possibility therefore of losing only two more spade tricks and one club.

THE QUALITY OF HURT The Autobiography of Chester Himes. Volume I. By Chester Himes. Doubleday. 351 pp. $7.95.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

volume of Chester Himes's antoblography with so much apprehension that it took much longer than necessary for its winning character to work its ways. Mr. Himes has a reputation for being an angry, alienated black who seels that his considerable body of writing has suffered because of bigotry-a reputation that has doubtless in part been exaggerated by ideological taffy-pulls—and I was convinced that I was in for 350 pages of bile but not at all sure that I was up to it. So when I came upon his statement on page one that "I can never again be hurt as much as I have already been hurt, even though I should live one hundred thousand years.' my suspicions seemed confirmed, and I immediately blocked out the preceding remark that "human beings-all human beings of whatever race or nationality or religious belief or ideologydo anything and everything."
(Not just white human beings, please note.)

And when, some hundred pages into the book. I came across what I took to be meant as an illustration of the ways of racism-an incident involving Mr. Himes's arrest in Fairfield, Conn., in 1950, for driving away from a curb and crashing into a car that, he claims self-defensively, "was pass-ing on my left . . . driving on the wrong side of a one-way street" (italics added), I found myself wondering just which side of a one-way street is the wrong one (the right side, on which said car would have had to be proceeding in order to have passed so closely on Mr. Himes's left?). And I felt myself armed to dis-miss the author as a hypersensitive crackpot.

So all the while I kept missing the point, which, as I see now, is that Mr. Himes is simply recalling his life from the time he was born—on July 29, 1909, in Jefferson City. Mo.—intil he was 45 years old and an occasionally published but more often impoverished expatriate writer trying to survive in Paris (with a subsequent volume to record the following two decades, I presume). He is simply setting down as accurately as he can recall, his migratory childhood in the Midwest; his violent young manhood in crime, which ended with a seven-and-a-half-year term for armed robbery in Ohio State Penitentiary, where he almost died in the Easter Monday fire of 1930 and where he began writing; his downward emotional spiral as a young writer on the East Coast; he spent in Paris, Arcachon, Majorca and London, working through his third novel, as well as a deeply satisfying but even tually failed love affair with a white divorcee from Philadelphia.

ADMIT I approached this first Mr. Himes's ability to write is his salvation, his pride, his identity, his manhood, not to mention his way of passing the painful hours; that no matter what he is recording whether comic anecdotes, impressions of friends and lovers, descriptions of his many temporary homes and the constantly changing scenery, or emotions recollected in anguish—he must get it all down in chronological order and as vividly as his talent permits. And it was only when I realized how much I was actually enjoying myself-how clearly 1 could picture his friends and lovers, how distinctly I could visualize the tastes and smells and colors of the world he moved through, and how much I had grown to care about the some. what random events in a life that has not after all been so very extraordinary (when one considers how often we have read of similar violent youths and similar expatriations and similar migrations through Europe)-it was only then that I got the point, dropped my apprehensions and began to savor Chester

Himes's story.

But what then of this "quality of burt" of Mr. Himes's title, which I took at first to be rather lame play on Portla's words in "The Merchant of. Venice," not quite warranting the inclusion of half the full speech in the book's epigraph? It is the quality of many things, Mr. Himes keeps reminding us—of white racism in America, yes, but also of seeing his brother blinded in an accident he might have prevented, of falling 30 feet in an elevator shaft; of seeing his parents torn apart by emotional conflicts, of discovering the depth and universality of human evil, of having one's talent rejected and of failing in one's deep desire to shield another person with one's love. Mr. Himes will no doubt be castigated for not subsuming all these hurts under the single heading of American racism (nor will it be the first time he stands thus condemned; as he reports with bitter glee, his second novel, "Lonely Crusade," offended every-one from The Daily Worker to James Baldwin when it appeared in 1947). And from a teleological point of view, perhaps such casti-gators will have a point. But Mr. Himes is not a teleologist, or an ideologue, or even one to spend his hours blaming the other. He is simply a writer with an enorm-ous capacity to record sensuous life as it is experienced from one the lie de France in April: 1953; and his first year abroad, which he spent in Paris. Arcachon.

The spent in Paris. Arcachon. speech on mercy: for Mr. Himes the quality of hurt and the quality of mercy are just two sides of the same humanity.

Mr. Lehmann-Haupt is a New-I kept missing the point that York Times book reviewer.

NFL Comes to Paris To Work for Charity

By Bernard Kirsch

PARIS, March 21 (TRT).-Football American style and several Marx Brothers films, both difficult to translate, will be coming to Paris for charity, something easy to understand. Three representatives of the National Football League's Players Association—president John Mackey of Baltimore, vice-president Bill Curry, also of the Colts, and Dallas Cowboy Bob Hayes—were in Paris today to amounce that 42 NFL players will give a demonstration here in the Charlety Stadium on May 27 for the benefit of the American Hospital.

"And maybe our being here will improve understandings, and bring better relations between two countries and two peoples (French and American)," said Mackey at an American Embassy conference room, a photograph of America's No.-1 football fan—President Nixon—decorating the wall.

The demonstration of American Football, or Rugby Americain, the same thing to the French, at the 7,000-seat stadium will close out "Sports Week" in Paris. Also on the program are demonstrations of softball and touch football, also a golf tournament, and hopefully, some top-name American en-

The Marx Brothers films, "not seen in France for 20 years" according to a spokesman for the NFL group, will be brought over by Susan Marx, the widow of Harpo. She is a football fan.

"It will not be a real game, but a demonstration with-out outright collisions." Mackey said. "We can't afford to get anyone injured. It may not even be at half speed, but it will give everyone an idea of the game we play."

The 42 players will include the player representative of each of the 26 teams, and 26 other choice pros. Among those coming will be Kansas City's end Otis Taylor, Dellas's Super Bowl quarterback Roger Staubach, Baltimore's Tom Matte, and the Chiefs' Jan Stenerud, who "learned to kick in your type of football," said Curry to the French and

"At home, we call your football soccer," Curry said. "We stole your name. Thank you for the use of it and we hope we'll be allowed to keep using it."

They probably will, especially if everything works out during Sports Week. Hopefully, enough money can be gathered to aid in the hospital's fund drive to construct a Franco-American medical center and scientific research center.

being scored last year than just three seasons ago.

The problem is now before the competition committee, which is studying proposed rule changes that would aid the offense. The committee has spent a week deliberating and is expected to make any recommendations to

In discussing the league's blg-gest problems. Rozelle sald most of the litigation against the sport involved antitrust sults. "Hundreds of thousands of dollars" were being spent by the league in legal fees, he said, noting that there were eight such suits pending.

LONDON, March 21 (API,-Jose Napoles, Cuban-born world welterweight boning champlon, today rejected a demand that he take a dope test before defending his title against Britain's Ralph Charles.

Terry Lewiess, Charles's manager, demanded in a letter to the British Boxing Board of Control that Napoles take the test immediately before the fight March 28 at London's Wembley Stadium. Dope tests have never been given to boxers in Britain, but Lawless said: "Latin American fighters have been known to take stimulants and I want full protection for my fighter."

Jarvis Astaire, television and boxing promoter who is representing Napoles here, said:

"Napoles regularly has Vitamin B-12 injections. He has had two since he arrived in this country last week and although the manufacturers claim the vitathe full ownership at Thursday's min produces extra energy, it would be ludicrous to suggest that the injections are illegal stimulants."

Astaire said Lawless was ask-ing for an amendment to the rules of boxing in this country. "Napoles does not agree," As-taire said. "He entered into a contract to box Charles under existing rules."

The Parisian Equivalent of a Beachcomber

By Waverley Root

PARIS (IHT).—Somewhere toward the beginning of Ernest Hemingway's "The Sun Also Rises," there is a brief passage in which a character named Harvey Stona discovered seated at R café table (in the Rotonde, at a guess). I do not have the book handy, but as I remember it, Harvey Stone gets only a passing salute, two or three paragraphs at the most, and pever appears again. The reader might well wonder wby be turns up at all.

My guess would be that he was such a permanent fixture in the scene Hemingway was describing that he found it impossible to leave him out. For, brief though his appearance is, Harvey Stone, thanks to the accuracy of Hemingway's observation and to his gift for reproducing the nuances of the spoken word, is immediately identifiable by anyone who knew the background. Harvey Stone is Harold Stearns I always merge the image of Harvey

Stone sitting behind Hemingway's tahla with B scene I witnessed myself, when Harold Stearns was likewise placed (this was in the Rotonde), with a high pile of saucers hefore him. This was in the days when waiters kept track of their customers' libations by bringing with each drink B saucer marked with its price, to be totaled up when the time came to

A goggle-eyed American girl who had just been told the identity of the Buddha behind the saucers was being led up to be introduced. Harold did not acknowledge the introduction. He looked up at the intruder and asked, "Will you pay for these saucers?" The girl gasped, "Why should I?" she demanded, can't," Harold said. She paid.

In the first half of the 1920s, Stearns was being touted as the white bope of American literature. He owed his reputation perhaps more to the fact that he was a protégé of H. L. Mencken than to personal achievement, for his output had been slight. He had put out a book which created a certain Stir at the time, entitled "The American Civilization," or something of the sort, whose hallyhoo was centered around the single name of Harold Stearns. I was therefore surprised to discover when I bought it that it was a symposium to which a score of other authors had contributed. Stearns was listed as its editor, and had written himself, if memory serves, a single chapter, and perhaps the preface. Then Stearns came to Europe, and what happened to him here I never knew, for his transformation had occurred hefore I arrived in 1927. He had become the Parislan equivalent of a heachcomber. There was a vague story that his downfall was the result of an unfortunate entanglement with some girl or other. I never learned the details, I always wondered if Harold had not invented his private version of Adam's fall to account simply for a natural talent for drinking. Not for getting drunk, mind you; just for grinking.

I never saw him drunk, and as far as I know, peither did anyone else. His usual tipple was beer, and he was capable of spending all his waking hours screwed into his chair at the Rotonde, as the saucers rose before him, with no visible change in

'Peter Pickem'

I found myself in daily contact with what remained of Harold Steams when he became Peter Pickem. Peter Pickem was a name owned by the Paris edition of the Chicago Tribune, of which I was then (1930) news editor. It was bestowed on whoever happened at the moment to be predicting for the paper the potential results of horse races. Peter Pickems came and went until Harold took over the job, and remained

In those days the only way to place a bet on a horse race was to go to the track. Fans who couldn't make it would confide their money to Harold to place for them, usually on his tips, and after a while some of them suspected a discernible pattern in the operation. When their horses won, Harold would return the money, with the explanation that he hadn't gotten out to the track in time to place bets; when they lost—well, they lost.

As I remember Harold, he would never have been named one of the world's 10 best dressed men. I seem to recall a weatherheaten felt hat and an overcoat, whatever the season or the weather, which came close to sweeping the ground, so that from a little distance he looked like a statue waiting for unveiling. He always were a shirt which seemed to be at its fourth day of service, a difficult trick to achieve.

Harold was unsmiling and tacitum. By saying nothing himself ba made you do the talking, with the result that you often wound up making absurd remarks, such as offering to buy him yet another drink. I do not recall that he himself ever offered to hoy one.

Once, out of sheer curiosity, standing with him at the bar of the Chope Cadet, I made a deliberate effort to beat his technique. I had bought him one drinkhe was taking cognac, exceptionally, for I was—and I determined not to finish my glass at the same time he did, and thus, in case I wanted a second, as I suspected I would be stuck with treating him again. He took the merest sip from his glass, to match my larger swig, and set it down. I waited a loogish time for him to con-tinue and at last, in desperation, I slugged down the rest of my drink and pushed my glass forward for a refill-and there, lo and behold, was his emptied glass beside mine.

I hadn't seen him move.

His mastery of the art of cadging included money too, but I had been warned about that befere he came on the paper, and I kept my guard up. He only got through it once. We were again standing at a bar having drinks on me when he suddenly said, out of a clear sky, 'Let me have 50 francs, will you?" and I hand-ed them to him like a man hypnotized. I am convinced that he did not then particularly need 50 francs, but was simply exercising what was for him a fina art on someone he had not yet touched. mysterious sense had informed him that at precisely that instant-five minutes before or after it would not have worked-I was vulnerable, and for that exact sum. It was an uncanny demonstration of skill, well worth 50 francs to witness-once.

Harold's masterpiece of borrowing lasted for months and involved the entire editorial staff of the Chicago Tribune. His story was that a horse owner, grateful for the money he had won on Harold's tips, had made him a present of a colt Harold considered promising, though his owner did not. For months Harold's friends and colleagues supported the animal. He borrowed for stable rent, for trainer's fees, for hay and grain, for harness.

His equestrian needs were desperate, hut they had to be dragged out of him. He would stand before his glass at the bar. staring into space, or sit behind his saucers at a table, unspeaking, until whoever was with him was obliged to hreak the tension hy bringing up the only available subject the horse. He would then be presented with the latest hill.

At first pobody believed in the horse's existence, but the story hecame so involved that in the end it acquired an inevitable reality. Besides, the time was coming for a showdown. The colt was reaching racing age. And, indeed, Harold finelly told us the name of the race in which he would make his debut. Wa chipped in to pay the entry fee.

Then one day, one of us went down to the Chope Cadet, and there was Harold, staring again into emptiness. The first attempts to draw a word out of him failed ntterly. At last he deigned to answer. "What's wrong, Harold?" his drinking companion had asked. "What's the matter with you?" "Nothing," Steams mumbled from the depths. "Nothing at all." "Bad day at the track?" the other suggested. "Won about a hundred," Harold admitted. "How's the horse shaping up?" his interlocator asked.

Harold shifted position and looked the questioner in the eye. "Broke his leg," he said. "We had to shoot him." There was a pause, not too long, not too short. "Have you any idea." he asked, "how much it costs to bury a horse?"
